Economic and Market Commentary October 2025

During November, the yield on the 2-year Treasury note fell eight basis points (“bps”) to 3.49%. The yield on the benchmark 10-year Treasury fell seven bps to 4.01%. The yield on the 30-year Treasury rose one bps to 4.66%.

Despite a lack of timely government data in November, alternative sources indicated solid economic growth, continued labor market weakness, and moderating inflation. While real GDP is still tracking at a 3.9% annualized rate in the third quarter of 2025, the long-awaited September jobs report showed that the nonfarm payroll employment growth remains weak, pushing the unemployment rate to a cycle-high of 4.4%. Moreover, layoff announcements increased in October, and continuing jobless claims neared their cycle high in November. As a result, the preponderance of data points to downside risks to job growth, and upside risks to the unemployment rate over the next 6-12 months. Meanwhile, in the absence of the October inflation report, bond market expectations for the Consumer Price Index (CPI) one year ahead decreased from 3.4% in September to 2.6% in November, reducing the upside inflation risk.

Recent Federal Reserve (Fed) speeches suggest that policymakers still differ on the future path of policy rates. One side argues that the labor market remains healthy, so policymakers need to keep rates restrictive to prevent a reacceleration of inflation from tariffs. The other side is worried about further deterioration in an already weak labor market and believes tariffs are a one-time increase in the price level that policymakers should look through. We agree with the latter, as downside risks to the labor market more than offset any upside risk to inflation. As a result, at the last meeting of 2025, we expect the Fed to cut its policy rate by 25 bps to prevent further deterioration in labor market conditions. In 2026, we anticipate an additional 75 bps of cuts to bring the fed funds rate down to a neutral rate of roughly 3%.

Florida Trust Short Term Bond Fund

Short fixed income returns were positive across all sectors in November, continuing a strong year, as short-term yields decreased while spreads were consistent. The Treasury yield curve steepened in November, as the market digested Fed commentary on further rate cuts in December and 2026. The STBF posted a +0.49% total return for November, in line with the benchmark ICE BofA 1-3 Year US Treasury index, which returned 0.46%. Calendar year-to-date, the STBF has returned +5.19% versus 4.76% for the benchmark.

The STBF remains well-positioned as we continue to invest in a high-quality tilt and a diversified mix of credit, with ample liquidity, and a neutral to modestly long duration position. The STBF is poised to potentially outperform shorter, money market-like options as the Fed looks to continue to ease policy and cut interest rates. As the yield curve normalizes there will be opportunity for positive bond price performance in addition to the attractive income return offered by the STBF.

Corporate and securitized markets continued to show strong performance in November. Overall risk premiums remained little changed despite increased scrutiny of AI debt financing from big tech companies and slight risk aversion due to the prolonged government shutdown. The ability of the debt markets (private, public high grade, and securitized) to finance the huge projected capital expenditure for AI will be played out over the coming years, but for now massive deals in both public and private markets are funded with relative ease. With narrow risk premiums in both the corporate and securitized markets we are judicious in our issuer selections but continue to be overweight allocations to the corporate and securitized credit markets. We believe there is room for rates to fall further than current market expectations due to softening labor markets and the waning concern of elevated inflation, leading us to position the portfolio duration neutral to modestly long to its benchmark.

The STBF is assigned Fitch rating agency's highest Fund Credit Quality Rating and Fund Market Risk Sensitivity Rating of AAAf/S1. The net 30-Day SEC Yield for the fund was 3.83% at month end, compared to 4.31% as of 2024-year end. The liquidity of the fund is strong, with 29% of funds invested in Treasuries and government related securities. There were no cash flows during November.
